

You want to have people around for dinner, but have nothing except smoked salmon. All the shops are shut.

You are upset about your failure to achieve your ambition of becoming a doctor.

Your friend's child has died.

When you were a child, your father or mother would often wake you up to take you to the toilet, so that you didn't wet the bed.

Your own child is dead and lying in a box.

You want to have sex with your mother.

You are arrested for killing a newborn baby.

You are jealous of a friend, who you think your partner has a crush on, but who is a bit thin for your partner's usual tastes.

You receive a fine from the taxman for failing to declare some of your earnings.

You have a crush on a friend of a friend, who you hope will turn up at the funeral.

You see two palaces with a small house in between. Your spouse leads you up a small path to the house and opens the door.

You are having an affair, and are worried that the precautions that you have both taken to avoid pregnancy may not have worked.

You—a man—are in an unfamiliar location, but have a strong sense that you have been there before.

You have experienced an unwanted pregnancy.

You are standing by a lake in the dark; the pale moon is reflected in the water. You throw yourself into the lake.

You want to have sex from behind.

You are being chased by burglars or ghosts.

You want to have a baby.

You want to have people around for dinner, but have nothing except smoked salmon. All the shops are shut.

You are jealous of a friend, who you think your partner has a bit of a crush on, but who is a bit thin for your partner's usual tastes (and who you have no intention of fattening up by inviting round for dinner).

Your friend's child has died.

You have a crush on a friend of a friend, who you hope will turn up at the funeral.

Your own child is dead and lying in a box.

You have experienced an unwanted pregnancy. (The "box" is not a coffin but is used in its slang sense of "vagina.")

You are arrested for killing a newborn baby.

You are having an affair, and are worried that the precautions that you have both taken to avoid pregnancy may not have worked.

You receive a fine from the taxman for failing to declare some of your earnings.

You are upset about your failure to achieve your ambition of becoming a doctor. (Doctors are typically high earners.)

You see two palaces with a small house in between. Your spouse leads you up a small path to the house and opens the door.

You want to have sex from behind. (The symbolism here is fairly obvious.)

You—a man—are in an unfamiliar location, but have a strong sense that you have been there before.

You want to have sex with your mother. (Freud's famous "Oedipus complex"; the familiar location is your mother's vagina.)

You are standing by a lake in the dark; the pale moon is reflected in the water. You throw yourself into the lake.

You want to have a baby. (Throwing oneself into the water represents coming out of the water—i.e., being born. The moon represents the mother's bottom.)

You are being chased by burglars or ghosts.

When you were a child, your father (burglar) or mother (ghost in her white nightgown) would often wake you up to take you to the toilet, so that you didn't wet the bed.